New Traditional Sisters: Filiae Labóris Mariæ

Another group of sisters devoted to the Church's Traditional Liturgy has formed: Filiae Labóris Mariæ (Daughters of the Works of Mary) was founded in 2017 in Independence, Missouri. Initially affiliated with St. Mary's Parish there, they recently began to staff a new apostolate at All Saints, the FSSP parish in Minneapolis.

Accompanying the below photo on All Saints' Facebook page was this description: "A relatively new, semi-contemplative, semi-active order based on the Augustinian rule, the Sisters daily pray the entirety of the traditional Divine Office in common and will be devoted towards working in our successful homeschool co-op and helping teach Catechism and First Communion classes to our young people, amongst other tasks yet to be determined."

The continued debut and growth of religious communities committed to the Extraordinary Form, both women's and men's, is one of the most significant assurances of a solid future for the Traditional Mass.

Pre-55 Holy Week Chart

With the increasing interest in the pre-1955 Holy Week, an enterprising individual named Sharon Kabel has composed a spreadsheet delineating the specific reforms for each day of Holy Week. It's a dazzling, detailed read:

https://docs.google.com/spreadsheets/d/1wVndUaphJfKnu3UXTL-eQkim-0XFcrGQp21Synppfvo/edit?fbclid=IwAR0xqvayHL8kDtUVqj4CU4dOAKvo5uqfi6X_clmUI3DkvEsDBZXWthkZk68#gid=0

For now, the pre-55 Holy Week may only be celebrated by those religious communities who have sought and received permission from the Vatican's Ecclesia Dei office to offer it. That authorization is only temporary, though the high level of interest suggests that Rome may eventually broaden permission.
