Historic Gold Solemn Vestment Set Discovered

In the bottom drawer of the sacristy cabinet at the Academy of the Sacred Heart Chapel, buried under layers of protective paper, an amazing gem was discovered: A solemn gold vestment set, apparently never used. Perhaps it was purchased just before the liturgical changes of the 1960s. A volunteer from the Oakland County Latin Mass Association offered to freshen up the set and prepare it for use, and in 2019 it made its debut at a Solemn High Mass celebrated by then-newly ordained Fr. John McKenzie (pictured wearing a cope which is not part of the vestment set). Before departing the Academy for its new home at Orchard Lake Seminary, the OCLMA came to an agreement to purchase the vestment set from the Academy, as it would have been a shame to see such lovely liturgical garments languish unused.

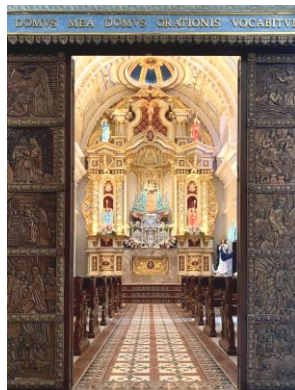

His curiosity piqued, OCLMA president Jon McDonnell Googled the name of the maker of the vestment set, Hubert Gotzes of Krefeld, Germany, and discovered a web site which showcases the history of the firm, which ceased transacting business in 1992. The factory is now Haus der Seidenkultur (silk culture), a museum exhibiting Gotzes' weaving and embroidery work. For the full story, see www.seidenkultur.de.

A Magnificent Private Chapel in the Philippines

The July 15, 2018 and June 14, 2020 editions of this column discussed the variety of private chapels out there, mostly in homes. A reader pointed out what is perhaps the most impressive private chapel yet, at Vitreartus Liturgical Arts in San Pedro in the Philippines. The firm created this ornate chapel to showcase its church design capabilities. A full set of photos may be viewed at:
